

Jamison Ervin

Manager, Nature for Development
United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)

Genesis & Future of the Sustainable Development Goals

Biography

Jamison Ervin is manager of the Global Programme on Nature for Development. She has worked with UNDP since 2008. Among her diverse roles, she has co-authored and coordinated production for over 25 e-learning modules focusing on protected areas, sustainable consumption and production and National Biodiversity Strategies and Action Plans. She served as facilitator for UNDP's most recent MOOC on Protected Area Systems: Design and Management and Greening Consumption and Production. Previously she worked with The Nature Conservancy, World Wide Fund for Nature, and the Forest Stewardship Council. She holds a PhD in natural resources from the University of Vermont, a master's degree in international administration from the School for International Training, and a bachelor's degree in anthropology from Bates College. (USA)